

THE ANNUAL GIVING CAMPAIGN FUNDS

Education Outside is a nonprofit partner of San Francisco Unified School District.

The program provides Harvey Milk (and 46 other public elementary schools in San Francisco and Redwood City) with a trained, full-time outdoor instructor who teaches science and environmental literacy in the school garden. Each classroom participates weekly in Education Outside as part of the regular school day. Learn more at www.educationoutside.org.

"We've learned about how plants grow and how they transport their seeds to different places, like how dandelion seeds fly on the wind. I love doing garden jobs, like feeding the worms and digging around to look for big rocks!" - Zoe, Harvey Milk 3rd Grader

MEET OUR EDUCATION OUTSIDE TEACHER

GRACE CRUMMETT is a recent graduate of the University of Vermont who is using her B.S. in Elementary and Special Education to create an inclusive environment where all types of learners can explore their curiosities about the world around them.

Originally from San Diego, Grace is happy to be living on the West Coast again and discovering everything from the mountains to the ocean as well as the cityscape in between. Her experience working with children has taught her the significance of place-based learning, and how connection with surrounding natural space can inspire curiosity and a responsibility for the natural world.

Grace's work will help facilitate a generation of learners who critically question dominant paradigms and use problem solving to manifest transformation in the natural world.

"The start of the school year at Harvey Milk has brought some exciting changes to the outdoor classroom space, thanks to many members of our school community. Students have taken root in the garden by planting, exploring, and even cooking with some of the vegetables harvested right from our schoolyard!

I look forward to seeing all the ways in which they grow, helping to make the living classroom even more vibrant."
